THE GENERATOR

Thank you for your support of the Mistborn Allomancy Dice Kickstarter! As a token of our appreciation, we offer you this new method of using your Allomancy Dice to flesh out and add detail to NPCs in your games, quickly and easily. Note that this tool does not replace the rules for creating non-player characters, as detailed on page 559 of the Mistborn Adventure Game; rather, it is used alongside those rules, either during creation or during play, to add new dimensions to the Extras and Villains the Crew encounters in the course of play.

HOW TO USE THE NPC DETAIL GENERATOR

You can use this generator to add exceptional or standout details to any Mistborn NPC, above and beyond their game statistics. Simply gather up a complete set of your Mistborn Allomancy Dice (we have included results for dice included via the Kickstarter’s stretch goals as well) and roll them. Then group the results into like numbers or Nudges, much as you would when rolling the dice during a Mistborn Adventure Game session. Each grouping will then be rolled on a separate table, as follows:

Dice with this face...	...are rerolled on this table
1	Appearance
2	Backstory
3	Personality
4	Virtues
5	Vices
Nudge	Additional Powers and Traits

Example: During a game session, the players have latched onto a particular NPC — a barman who works at a local watering hole. Brandon thinks it would be interesting to flesh-out this character, so he gathers up and rolls his set of Allomancy dice, getting 1, 1, 2, 2, 4, 4, 4, 5, and two Nudges. Brandon refers to the table above and discovers he will roll twice on the Appearance table, twice on the Backstory table, three times on the Virtues table, once on the Vices table, and twice on the Additional Powers and Traits table.

Once you've determined which table(s) to roll on, simply reroll the appropriate dice and compare the results to the matching listing on the table(s). Specific nudges are listed on every one of these tables, representing rarer or more exotic features than those represented by numbers (such as Allomantic abilities, unusual backstories, or rare physical features). Note you cannot get duplicate results on these tables — numbered pairs or multiple Nudges offer different results than individual numbers or Nudge results.

Example: With his spread of rolls determined, Brandon goes to the individual tables and rolls again. He starts with the barman's appearance, scoring a 1 and a 3 — "Tired and haggard-looking" and "Threadbare clothing and/or equipment." He notes this barman may be poor and/or overworked, then moves on.

Next, he rolls his two dice for the barman's personality, scoring a 2 and an Atium Nudge — "Grew up on the plantations, but escaped" and "Former prisoner of a noble house or the Steel Ministry." Brandon's already seeing a story about this barman fleeing his plantation only to be caught and thrown into a dungeon by his masters, so he scribbles that down and goes to the next roll.

Next, Brandon rolls three times for the barman's virtues, getting two 3's and a 4. The pair gives a special result, so Brandon notes the barman is "Kind" and has an "Incorruptible spirit" — a fitting personality for a man who survived the dungeons of a cruel nobleman!

Brandon only rolls once for the barman's vice, getting a 2 — "Greedy." Perhaps his time in prison made him tight with his money and desperate to get ahead? Noting that, Brandon continues to the last roll.

Finally, Brandon rolls for our barman's additional Traits and Powers, scoring a 1 and a Brass Nudge, or "Keen Intellect" and "Soothe (Brass Misting)!" Brandon adds the Trait and Soother to the barman's statistics, and now has the pieces to assemble a richer character in our barman.

With your results noted down, use those pieces to form a stronger picture of your NPC. How might these details form a story behind this character, informing his or her actions now or in the past? What do they suggest the Heroes can learn by interacting with this character? How might this change the way they see this character, or the stories in which he or she appears? While assembling a character's history from randomly-generated attributes may be challenging, it can also push you and your players in new directions and add a new layer of richness to their interactions with the world and its inhabitants.

Example: Brandon now uses the pieces he's generated to form a fuller picture about our barman, whom he's named Geth. Brandon's idea is that Geth Snapped on the plantation, and, fearing for his life, fled his home, only to be caught and put to hard labor in a mine or field where he languished for years. Despite his internment, however, Geth never gave up, and eventually used his Soothing and smarts to escape the mines, fleeing to the city where he opened his bar. But even in his new life, Geth's past still echoes in his day-to-day: he's never quite shrugged off the weary look of his years of imprisonment, the poor cloth of the plantation, or the inherent desire to get and protect all he has that was so seriously beaten into him by his erstwhile masters. Still, Geth has an abundance of spirit and a deep kindness to him that makes him a valuable friend to the Heroes.

A FINAL NOTE

You should definitely feel free to use this generator in whole or in part, as needed. For instance, if a player is asking about an NPC's weaknesses, you might just roll a few dice on the Vices table to generate ideas on what sort of angles the Heroes can work against them.

Likewise, you should always feel free to ignore or reroll any details you generate that conflict with the character's concept or established backstory. This is really here for your convenience, so feel free to fold, spindle, and mutilate the results as needed, and most of all, have fun!
